Death Penalty

T SOME TIME during the present session of Parliament, members must vote on the highly emotional issue of capital punishment.

A bill introduced by the solicitor general, Mr. wrence T. Pennell, himself an ardent abolitionist who wept at the result of the vote in 1966, would establish a five-year test period during which time only convicted murderers of policemen or prison guards would face the death penalty.

The cabinet would retain the power to commute eden in these cases.

Without prejudice, it might be noted that Mr. Duncan Sandys, a prominent British politician, is heading a movement in Great Britain to restore capital punishment, suspended two years ago. He believes the experiment has failed. On the basis of Home Office statistics, Mr. Sandys claims that execution remains the best deterrent.

These figures show that in two years since suspension there have been 67 capital murder convictions in Britain; that is, premeditated killings which, previously, could have been punishable by hanging. In the two years before suspension there were only 35 such crimes.

Mr. Sandys also points out that crimes in which firearms were used in Britain in 1966 totalled 1,511 compared with 731 in the year before suspension. In any such cases, he says, murder might have resulted, and in many did.

However strong the evidence may be at present that lack of the death penalty deterrent encourages anyone bent on homicide to accept the risks, it is not conclusive. The British experiment, like that suggested for Canada, is for a period of five years. A more convincing statistical answer would be forthcoming at the end of it.

Abolitionists may argue that the Commons should accept Mr. Pennell's bill since the current government has commuted in every case before it. The new Conservative leader, Mr. Robert Stanfield, is an abolitionist, like his predecessor, Mr. John Diefenbaker. It is therefore improbable that either a Liberal or Con-servative cabinet alternative would fail to commute

But that, surely, is an argument that cuts both ways.

Late Warning

NEITHER THE UPSURGE in Progressive Conservative Party popularity nor the weakening of public support for the Liberal government as indicated by a recent national opinion poll should occasion much surprise across Canada.

What will elicit some astonishment, however, is the extent of the Tory gains over such a short space of time. Only two months ago poll figures showed that the Progressive Conservative Party could call on only 30 per cent of the public for support, trailing the Liberals by some 11 per cent.

Today this has dramatically changed. Not only has Tory public support shot up to 43 per cent but it now enjoys a substantial lead of 9 per cent over the Pearson administration.

As was to be expected the Liberal party is placing full credit for this reverse of political fortunes on the change of Tory leadership. But as flattering as this is to Mr. Stanfield the Liberals must not deny themselves the considerable credit due them for their own contribution to the shift in national backing.

The lack of leadership and the persistent indecisiveness displayed by the Pearson government at a time when this nation is in desperate need of a firm hand at the wheel was bound to react upon the public

But warnings have long been sounded for the Liberal government and fallen on deaf ears. This one may have come too late.

But his successor, General Creighton Abrams, will face the same, or similar conditions as did Field Marshal Lord Kitchener when he took over from Roberts 67 years ago.

True enough, the Boers did not attempt to meet the overwhelmingly superior British forces in pitched battle, but, spreading their strength in their swift commandos, for two years fought a punishing war of harassment under such skilful leaders as Botha, De Wit, De La Ray, Kemp, Hertzog and Smuts.

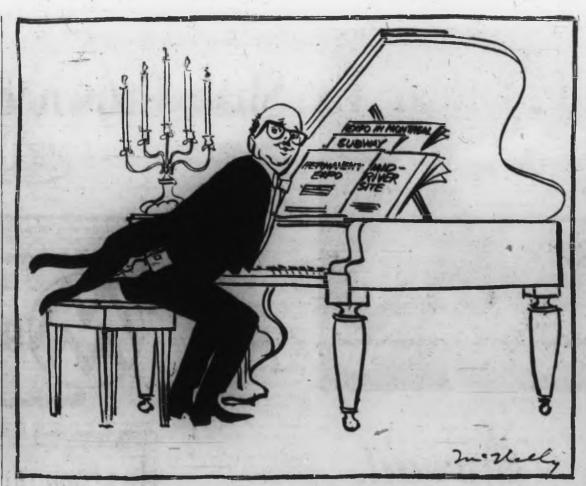

The result was the introduction by Kitchener of a scorched earth policy, the destruction of farms and stock, the wholesale transportation of old men, women and children to concentration camps and the imprison-ment of captured fighting men. These drastic methods were widely condemned, in Britain as ele

The terms of the peace, it is interesting to recall, were as generous as the battle tactics had been harsh. The Boers were granted self government among other things and substantial compensation was paid for the farms the British had destroyed.

The lesson here is plain to see. A numerically superior and superbly equipped army may destroy an enemy's capacity to meet it head on but that is a far cry from crushing his will to resist, particularly in a guerrilla war such as that in Vietnam, where foes can hardly be recognized or distinguished from friends and infiltration through non-existent lines is imposable to check.

The American people will be making a grave mistake if they accept the obviously absurd thesis that the questionable victory at Con Thien was in any way

De Gaulle's Fear Explained

UPI, from Paris

One of France's leading Gaullist writers said Thursday President de Gaulle's anti-Americanism stems from his fear that the United States has succeeded in building the most formidable empire of all time.

The bloc "would be in no way aggressively anti-Ameri-can" but would "try to resist, to change the course of events, so as to create a unity that stand up to America."

Labor Troubles Boost Tory Image

Strikes Injure Wilson

By ROBERT C. TOTH, from London

Wildcat strikes continued to plague Britain this week, again dramatizing the near-anarchy within some of the most important unions here and the difficulty facing the government in trying to revive the crippled economy.

One man at a Ford factory refused to change tools on his camshaft machine Wednesday and when he was sent home, 200 of his mates walked out. By Thursday 9,000 men were idled, another 20,000 jobs threatened, and the daily output of 2,500 cars-half for export-was halted.

On the docks, 17,000 men are still out at Liverpool and London, and the tie-up of $600,000,000 in exports over the five-week stoppage grows pass a law with a mandatory cooling-off period, as Tories have suggested. would do little good in most cases. Union leaders have not called the strikes, so it would be foolish to jail them or fine the national organization, and it would be worse than futile to jail tens of thousands of strikers.

Both strikes are "unofficial." having no approval of men. But about 90 per cent of all stoppages in Britain are unofficial. Of 600 stoppages at eight car plants during a sixmonth period last year, 595 were unofficial.

Obviously some reform is needed, however. Strong new labor legislation that would ements enforceable by law and set up labor courts to mediate disputes have been suggested to promote, if nothing else, a new climate of responsibility among unions.

The Labor Government ignores calls for action now. It will wait, as undoubtedly the Tories would wait if they were in power, on the report due next spring from a royal nission on trade unions which has been considering the overall problem for two years.

Many feel that Prime Min-ister Harold Wilson's handling will determine his fate at the was elected to a large extent by voters who thought only a unions into line. His failure to catch up to him in opinion Gellup on Thursday found for the first time that more people believe the Tories can better handle strikes and labor disputes than the Labor Party, and that the Tories vould be better at maintaining full employment. Labor Pary had long held the advantage in these fields.

Mcreover, Gallup reported that 54 per cent of the public felt the Labor Government was not doing all it could to settle industrial conflicts, while only 28 per cent felt it

Finally, for the first time years ago, a majority of the years ago, a majority of the country — 54 per cent — is dissatisfied with his perfor-mance, while Tory leader Edward Heath for the first time has surpassed Wilson in popularity, Gallup said.

If a national election were held now, the Tories could expect to win by landslide proportions, with an 11 per oent margin over Labor, according to Gallup. Such figures can, of course, change radically from week to

* * * But the restlessness of the British people with their unions, reflecting as it does on the Labor Government, will undoubtedly increase the most of not all of the trade union reforms which the royal

For basic transportation, this was a good idea.

We're taking it one step further.

The VW approach to basic transportation-no change for the sake of change-makes sense. We're taking that same approach and applying it to a domestic compact: our Rambler American.

The result is an improvement on the basic idea. Our Rambler American seats six. It has a real family sized trunk. It's powered by a modern 128 hp Six; a 145 hp Six and a 200 or 225 hp V8 are optional. You can order a 3-speed automatic transmission. It has a heater designed for Canadian winters. It is covered by a 2 year/24,000 mile warranty on the complete car plus a 5 year/50,000 mile warranty on the complete power train.

And because we have discontinued the annual model change for the Rambler American, we've been able to price it between the too small imports and the too costly compacts.

Not only is the initial cost lower, but the cost of replacements will also be lower-and resale value will be higher.

If you and your family have outgrown the import you now own—don't change your thinking. Just take it one step further-to a Rambler American from your nearby American Motors/Rambler dealer.

Russia vs. Canada is getting to be an annual event for Victoria hockey fans.

Although it had seemed unlikely up until yesterday, it's going to happen for the third straight time on Friday, Dec. 22, at Memorial Arena when Moscow's touring Selects play the third of their four B.C. games here.

Selects, one of the two or three best clubs in Russia, will meet the first Canadian national team —the one based in Winnipeg and the one which will be the nucleus for Canada's Olympic bid next spring.

Announcement of the Selects' visit was made jointly last night by Ivan Temple of the B.C. Amateur Hockey Association and arena manager

A further announcement as regards ticket sales will be made within a few days. It is believed that tickets will be scaled from $3.50 down and that the sale will start on a Sunday, either Nov. 26 or Dec. 3, in order to give all hockey fans the same chance of purchase.

There'll be a better idea of the chances of Victoria O'Keetes to retain their Pacific Coast Soccer League

Athletic Park. It's not just that the Islanders, beaten twice in their first three starts, can ill afford a third setback. Their opposition Saturday poses a new threat to title retention and, already beaten by Columbus and University of British Columbia, O'Keefes will soon have to show at least the ability to handle challengers on their home grounds if they hope to

from the ex-Victorian who manages them, Westminster Labatts will provide O'Keefes with an indicative test.

George Wright, who once played with Victoria United in the PCSL, believes he is in charge of the best New Westminster team since the 1961 Royals. He is not only certain that he has a strong contender but confident that his club can go all the way this season.

No one can argue too convincingly with him yet. Labatts are leading the league, unscored on and undefeated after two matches True, they have only scored two goals in gaining their two first and Wright is sure that his club has beffer than a goala-game scoring potential.

His lineup does look impres sive at that. In goal is Robin youngster who was with New Westminster last season and who has been a standout to merit his two shutouts.

Bill Sinclair and Gerry Heaney, a 24-year-old former player with Third Lanark of the Scottish League, are the fullbacks and Labatts have a steady intermediate line in veteran Jack James, Sandy

The big northern coho now are entering Vancouver Island rivers in fair numbers but indications are this will be a disappointing year on the spawning beds with fewer coho than expected returning.

As they hit the rivers the coho provide some sporty fishing off the estuaries with Buzz Bombs, Deadly Dicks, Krocodile spoons and the like. The same lures catch them in the rivers and quality fishermen take coho in the rivers on fly . . . and that is probably the sportiest of all salmon fishing.

The fishing of these coho once they enter the rivers is a controversial matter. Biologically, there isn't much difference between catching a coho in the saltchuck or in the river. Either is a potential spawner. But it does seem a shame to catch them when they have surmounted so many obstacles to reach the spawning grounds.

Discretion would seem to be the answer. You shouldn't ever fish over the spawning gravel beds. You should avoid fishing the coho when they are coloring. You should use sporting tackle and absolutely nothing that resembles a jig. Two fish, coho or springs only, is the limit in the rivers, but you are really lucky to hit into one. Certainly you shouldn't keep hooking and releasing fish. They then would likely die before spawning and that would be like killing the goose that lays the

With the coho are jacks and cutthroat trout, which also provide plenty of action. * * *

The winter springs are arriving in increasing numbers in lower Island waters.

Howard Pepper reports good fishing in Oak Bay waters off Cattle Point, around Fiddle Reef and close in to the Golf Links, with The Gap pretty spotty. The springs are running up to 15 pounds and are being taken on minnow and strip on 75 feet of line and six to eight ounces of weight.

Victoria-Albert Head waterfront is providing some fair fishing and winter springs in good numbers are reported off the kelp beds at Pedder Bay. The biggest so far weighed 13 pounds but most in the four to 10-pound class. Henry Rollin got his limit of four Wednesday, all springs. Coho are becoming few and far between in Juan de Fuca.

The winter springs are also being taken off Becher Bay and Secretary Island.

May Hall reports plenty of winter springs being taken in Finlayson Arm between the boathouse wharf and Goldstream Bill Barr got his limit Wednesday, biggest seven pounds Small spoons, 100 feet of line and four to six ounces of weight has been a good combination.

In the Willis Point area there are plenty of keeper-size grilse being taken and there are still a few coho in the Hatch Point area of the Inlet. At last, good coho fishing is reported from Cowichan Bay. Keep your fingers crossed that it will last a week or so.

Ricky Clecimarra, fishing with Chauncy Griggs and Stanley Kaisel, hit limit catches of 14 and 15-pounders this week on a fly rod with red and white Flashtails between early morning and 9 a.m. and later with blue and white Flashtails. He found with the fly fishing outfit he could keep a three to four-foot loop of line in his hand. He could feel the fish just touching the fly, and then he would quickly let the loop go. Usual result was a hard strike and a fish.

Tommy Moss hit excellent Cowichan Bay fishing Tuesday with a purple fly and Jim Chowa, fishing with Ted Marsh, got a 16:12-pounder on a surface-trolled light blue fly.

The big northern coho have shown up in the Qualicum area and are providing sport at the mouth of the Big Qualicum. Oyster River is also providing good coho and cutthroat fishing.

Hugh Aylmer hit into a 7.1-pound, two six-pound and a fourpound trout on Cowichan Lake at the top end Saturday.

Cowichan River is producing coho salmon, cutthroats and browns, and some fine rainbow fishing for river drifters at the top end. Upper reaches of the river will be closed to all fishing as of Nov. 1, until March 2.

Ed Enns, Les Hoover and Barry Allingham have just returned from a hunting trip 200 miles north of Dawson Creek with two moose, and two caribou. This westernd. Enns will be in the Nimpkish area out for the last weekend of elk shooting. Melvin Rimmer, 1854 Stelly's Cross Road, shot a 130-pound cougar in the Glintz Lake area Tuesday afternoon.

Nimpkish area is still the big producer of deer on Vancouver Island this year. On Oct. 14 and 15, the 112 hunters checked through the Campbell River checkpoint reported 17 deer and one elk for a 15 per cent success. On Oct. 21 and 22 some 87

Work Continues On B.C. Ferry

The B.C. ferry Queen of Prince Rupert, affoat but still crippled, is having her engines realigned.

It is expected to be back in service in three weeks, said Monty Aldous, general manager of B.C. Ferries.

He could give no estimate of cost of repairs which also include considerable electrical work.

The $6,500,000 ferry, tied up at Burrard Dry Dock Co., North Vancouver, has been out of service since it ran aground on Haddington Reef near Alert Bay Aug. 11.

The crumpled bottom has been repaired, but engine work has been held up by lack of available parts.

Pears Speeded Up

By M. V. CHESNUT

Garden Notes

My neighbour Ernie, who is a keen but decidedly opinionated gardener, has several fruit trees in his three-quarter acre plot which were there when he bought the place. He has two apples, two plums and a wall-trained peach, but no pears at all, and the other day I asked him why he didn't buy and plant a couple of pear trees.

"No dice," he answered. "They take too long before you get any fruit. You've heard the old saying, 'Plant Pears for Posterity?' Now I ask you what has Posterity ever done for me?"

There is some truth in Ernie's beet, of course. The old-fashioned pear trees, growing on their own roots or on some unclassified rootstocks, were terribly long in ceming into bearing and it was not uncommon to wait 15 or 20 years before tasting the fruit, hence the saying "Plant pears for your heirs." Not only that, but such trees grew to an enormous size, completely dominating and shading a small garden. I remember an old pear tree in my grand-mother's garden which was higher than a two-storey house.

Not any more, however. Nowadays you can buy pear trees grafted on to quince roots, and a very special strain tree to a size quite practicable for the smallest garden. Not only are the trees small and compact, but they come into bearing only two or three years after planting. Maximum cropping is reached in the fifth year and grand crops of sweet, sun-ripened pears can be harvested every year thereafter.

These dwarf trees do not produce dwarf fruits of some special variety, but like the dwarf apples I described earlier, you get full-sized fruits in whatever variety you wish. If your taste runs to the Bartlett pear, for instance, you can buy a Barlett tree in dwarf form and it will produce fruits identical size, flavor and texture with a Barlett pear from an orchard-size tree.

Bartlett is a grand pear and one of the easiest to grow in our climate, but there are others of even finer flavor. Moreover, it isn't wise to grow only one single variety, for nearly all the pears need a "husband" - another pear tree of a different variety - growing nearby if the blossoms are going to set and produce a satisfactory crop of fruit.

Conference makes a good mate for Bartlett, and Bartlett for Conference, so the two are excellent companions. Bartlett is usually ready for picking ence in late September. The flavor of both is improved by storing for a week after picking at a temperature around 65 degrees. Anjou — it should be called Buerre d'Anjou — is a late pear, usually ready for picking around the middle of October in our district. It makes a big pear, greeny yellow with russet cheeks buttery and without grittiness, and it can be stored until Christmas.

Bartlett, Conference and Anjou are probably the most reliable pears to grow here, but if you would like to live dangerously, I suggest you add Comice and Jargonelle to your list. These are connoisseur's pears, with flesh that melts in the mouth, and Jargonelle is very early, often ripe and ready to eat by mid-August, thereby extending the pear season. The performance of these two is unpredictable, though, and you must be prepared to write off your losses if these trees don't take a fancy to your particular growing conditions.

Like most fruit trees, pears cannot tolerate soggy low ground puddles stand over the roots in winter. and because the blossoms appear earlier than on apple trees, it is best to avoid rockets where late spring frosts

WASHINGTON - What a tragedy! I'm speaking of the sad demise of my brilliant and seemingly fool-proof plan to establish a thriving trade with the primitive Washington

I have evolved the scheme only after years of periodic exploration here while working on my book, Strange Native Customs in Washington and Other Savage Lands.

* * * What was it, I kept asking myself, that spurred these backward peoples into waging endless bloody warfare among themselves. What priceless goal did they seek? What prize could conceivably reward the victor adequately enough to justify this constant

I at last came to the inescapable conclusion. And thus it was that I arrived here this time bearing whole sackful of bright, shiny, plastic telephone

To understand the allure these trinkets have for the savage here, one must realize that he simply has nothing else to fight for.

Money holds no appeal, for the essential characteristic of Washington money (the basic unit of currency is "The Billion Dollar") is that it isn't real. Nor is power the key. For any native who is unfortunate enough to gain power is immediately chopped up into tiny pieces. But, ah, telephone buttons!

On his entry into one of the indigenous tribes, such as the Pentagonians, the young native is given only a plain, black phone unadorned by a single button. With this symbol of shame goes a green metal desk, an armless steel coatroom.

As he fights his way up, he is rewarded with a five-button phone. This earns him an imitation walnut desk, a cubicle of his own, a parking space, one secretary and

We see, then, that telephone buttons are valued by the native not only for their intrinsic worthlessness (a precious commodity in Washington), but also for the emoluments that come with them. And around here, that's something to fight for.

natives' insatiable lust for telephone buttons, you can imagine how eagerly I looked forward to displaying my sack filled with such trinkets to these simple people.

Oh, how they would cluster around me, their eyes bright with avarioe. Why, a half dozen of these cheap little totems would purchase all

Dude Western Star

LONDON (NANA) — Tenney Steele, Britain's gift to the U.S. screen, will star in a western — just as soon as he learns how to ride a house. Tommy, finishing up his Finian's Rainbow with Fred Astaire at Warners, has bought the story — to be titled any second now — from Lee Brackett who wrote Jehn Wayse's El Dorado. The movie will be made in the wide open spaces of America, which will be a change from Snain.

In hard cash, the lawsuit of Prime Minister Harold Wilson against the movie pop group, who had libeled him on a postcard, cost them less than $10,000, but the front-page publicity quadrupled their price and their manager hot-jetted to the dear old U.S. to book a tour for them.

Over in Paris, the Alain Delons have reconciled — he filed for divorce rather quietly three months ago. They are now in Germany where Alain is starring in The Motorcycle for Jack Carditi, with Marianne Faithful who was so faithful to Rolling Stone Mick Jagger at the time of his big trouble. It's Marianne's first film. The publicity obviously didn't hurt her either. She is another student of the school of meditation, India-style, and believes devoutly in reincarnation.

Construction contractor Normali McCurrie of Vancouver is in fair condition with a fractured left arm and bruises and electrical contractor Alex Jegeris was in fairly good condition with an injured right wrist and multiple lacerations.

The passengers were working on two houses being built at Carmanah Foint Lighthouse. They were being flown out to return to Vancouver.

Principal lightkeeper Hubert Pearce had just waved the men off. He turned away from the helicopter and started up the stairs to his house.

"I heard a crash and knew there was trouble. As I turned around the plane was rolling down the hill," he said.
"I shouted to the men and we ran down the hill and pulled them out. They were all more or less conscious. Ron (the pilot) got out under his own steam once we got the helicopter off him, but he passed out afterward. I think he had a concussion."

Mr. Pearce rushed back to the lighthouse and phoned Tofino Radio, which called the Rescue Co-ordination Centre in Vancouver

And that about sums up the reaction of most laymen — and some scientists — to the first public showing here Thursday night of movies which purport to depict the legend of the hairy Sasquatch.

Taken last Friday in a remote section of northern California by Roger Patterson of Yakima, Wash., the film was shown separately to a group of scientists at University of British Columbia and press at a downtown hotel.

They show a female hair with powerful, sloping shoulders, long arms and the head like a gorilla.

The pictures are often blurred because the photog-rapher explained he was running to try and keep up with the creature which they countered suddenly near an old logging road.

Some of the frames, how ever, are quite sharp and when projected on the screen as a still picture clearly showed a humanoid creature which scientists admit they could not immediately class-
